Danielle Chambers Launches Council Campaign

[CORVALLIS, OR, 8/3/2026] Announcement

Danielle Chambers officially launched her Corvallis City Council campaign for Ward 7 last Saturday evening at Common Fields. In attendance were over 30 friends and supporters, including Mayor Charles Maughan, Councilor Briae Lewis, Adair Village Councilor John Wilson, and several other prospective Councilors. If she wins her bid, she will be the second trans Councilor in Corvallis history and the first trans woman.

Danielle is running on a platform of prioritizing Corvallis's local economy, addressing housing costs and homelessness, and building toward a sustainable future for the city. In her kickoff speech, she explained her roots in Oklahoma and how Corvallis became both her home and a place of healing. She also detailed how she planned to accomplish her campaign goals, including prioritizing investment into locally-owned businesses, creating community land trusts and starter homes, and empowering the community's Climate Action Advisory Board.

"We find ourselves in the middle of many crises, including an eight million dollar budget gap, runaway inflation, climate change, and a federal government robbing its own citizens of their rights and their tax dollars," Danielle said. "These issues weren't caused in one day or by one person, and they won't be solved in one day or by one person. Instead, when we say to a neighbor: ‘Aren’t you getting sick of this, too?’ That’s when we can start working to really solve these things.” She painted a picture for Corvallis where prices for everyday goods and homes were affordable, elderly citizens on fixed incomes were not forced to live at shelters, and the people of Corvallis led the way on combatting climate change. Her speech ended with her call and response campaign motto: For the People – For the Future.

Danielle also noted that she is taking measures to run a transparent campaign, including performing voluntary financial filings with the state, rejecting business donations, and only accepting small-dollar donation amounts. She welcomes all inquiries at her campaign email address, or through the contact form on her website.
